Answer the questions.

At the age of 93, Jing Kui acted in The Old Barber (《剃头匠》), a film about the life of an old barber. He needed to remember all his words in the film and live with the other actors for weeks, but he finished the film successfully and won an acting prize.

Mr Jing was a barber all his life. Born in 1913, he started to learn how to cut hair at the age of 15. Five years later, he had his own barbershop. When he was 88, he was still working. The only difference was that he began to travel from home to home to serve the people. And most of them were very old. His story moved people, as well as the film director (导演), who decided to make a film about him. The old barber got up very early to practise his words of the film each day. He worked hard at it because he didn't want to disappoint the director. The director was worried, because he didn't know if Mr Jing could keep it going until the filming was done. But Mr Jing really did better than the director had expected.

1. Did the success of The Old Barber bring Mr Jing an acting prize?

2. When did Mr Jing have his own barbershop?

3. Mr Jing stopped working when he was 88, didn't he?

4. What did the film director think of Mr Jing's work in the film?

5. What can we learn from Mr Jing's story?
